
By David Gunderson

Suspicious Hosts

Your editorial on the CIA (Sept. 22) misses a very important point.

How can an American go to foreign countries today, especially to democratic countries, without people in those countries automatically suspecting him of being a spy sent to subvert their political system? I travel all over the world, lecturing at universities and visiting industries and I cannot have an honest, sincere relationship with my hosts. How do I prove that I am not a CIA spy? Is this what Kissinger and Ford call "the best interest of the United States"?

A. J. Durelli,
Professor,
School of Engineering and Architecture
The Catholic University of America.
Washington.